

Resumé

Studying the labor market from an Economics perspective is very useful to understand its actors and dynamics. However, while on it we cannot miss the chance of working on your job market prospects.

In every job market application you have experienced or will experience soon enough, a well-crafted resumé is the starting point of any employer's screening process.

Therefore, this assignment's goal is very practical. Let us use this course topic to work on your resúmes, exchange feedback, and make improvements where needed.

This assignment will work in two steps. First, you will work on your one-page resumé, using the resources provided by the College and the other links I recommend on the next page. Second, we will go through a peer-review process where your classmates will give anonymous feedback on the strengths and areas for improvement on your resumé.

After the peer-review process is over, I will provide feedback on your final versions. This way, regardless if you already have a resumé or if this is your first time writing one, getting as much feedback as possible makes all the difference when having real job market experiences.

First-step submissions are due 11/05 (Wednesday). Then, your reviewers will have until the beginning of the following Wednesday meeting (11/12) to provide feedback on its strengths and areas for progress.

After any improvements have been addressed, you have until 11/17 (Monday) to submit your final resumé files for my evaluation.

As a final reminder, keep your files to a single page.

On the next page, I provide further resources to help you navigate this assignment.

Resources

- Student guidelines for peer review \(Carleton College\)
- Emerson Career Services for Students & Alumni
- How to format a resume \(PennState Student Affairs\)

→ This page contains several sample resumés, which can be pretty useful references for your own.